The Treaty of Rome (1957) primarily established:

A. The European Central Bank
B. The European Economic Community (EEC)
C. The Schengen Area
D. The Euro currency

The Empty Chair Crisis (1965–1966) was caused by:

A. France refusing to attend EEC meetings
B. Germany leaving the European Community
C. The UK vetoing EU expansion
D. Italy blocking agricultural reforms

The Luxembourg Compromise established that:

A. The European Parliament has full legislative power
B. Member states can veto decisions affecting vital national interests
C. The Euro would replace national currencies
D. The UK would leave the EU

The European Union enlargement in the 2000s (especially in 2004) is significant because it:

A. Reduced the number of EU member states
B. Integrated mainly Western European founding countries
C. Marked the largest single expansion of the EU, including many Central and Eastern European countries
D. Replaced the European Community with NATO

In analyses of Euroscepticism, such as those discussed by Patrick Bijsmans, the rise of Eurosceptic attitudes in the 1980s is often linked to:

A. Full economic collapse of the European Community
B. Concerns about sovereignty and the impact of deeper European integration policies
C. The disappearance of national governments in Europe
D. The immediate end of Cold War divisions

According to the historian Tony Judt, the origins of European integration after 1945 were mainly driven by:

A. A desire to create a single global superpower
B. Economic recovery needs and the goal of preventing future European wars
C. The expansion of NATO military strategy only
D. The collapse of the Soviet Union